Make Your Waist Linings Fuller Than the Outside—Boning Bodices.

Outside—Boning Bodiees.

The home dressmaker should bear in mind that the lining of a bodieo must be a little fuller than the outside in order to insure a perfect fit. The difference is trifling, seemingly, but is absolutely necessary. The seams should be deeply notched at all curves, after being stitched, and should be pressed open flat and the edges overcast or bound with thin, narrow ribbon. Before pressing the seams it is well to pass the hot iron over a fragment of the dress goods, to be sure that heat will not permanently change the color.

French medistes bone every seam of the bediec, although here the side seams of the back piece are sometimes left unboned on account of their extreme curve. The bones may be warmed and bent to the shape of the seam on which they are to be Tatting, which was a popular sort of fancy work with the young ladies of the last generation, is again in vogue and is made in the form of yokes for night-dresses, corset covers, etc., as well as in shaped handkerchief borders and collars. It is often extremely pretty and delicate as well as refined looking, but as the separate rings are connected by only one thread it is an extremely short lived lace and well merits its French name, frivolite.

ANOTHER LINCOLN STORY.

ANOTHER LINCOLN STORY.

It's a Wise Man Who Knows His Own Home After Housecleaning.

"I never had the pleasure," said Secretary Morton the other day, "of any near or particular acquaintance with Abraham Lincoln. I have had him described to me often, however, by men close to him and who knew him well., As everybody is aware, Lincoln was a man of humor rather than wit—fond of a good story and a good laugh. Lincoln was not an orderly man and paid no heed to things about him. If he had owned a lawn, it would probably have struggled through life unknown, and a gate on one hinge struck Lincoln as being just as good a gate as if it owned two. In good truth, unless men have romanced beyond reason, Lincoln was a bit shiftless. I recall a story about the great president which Richardson, once a member of the national house from Illinois and a great friend of Lincoln, told me.

"We, Lincoln and I, had been away on me.

"We, Lincoln and I, had been away on the circuit together," said Richardson.
"The judges and lawyers traveled from "The judges and lawyers traveled from and larges and lawyers traveled from county to county in those days, the former to hold court and the latter to try what cases they had and pick up others. Lincoln and I had been away some weeks, and one afternoon toward the close of an early summer's day we rode into Spring-field, where Lincoln lived.

"His yard and the scene about the house had been when he left a bit disreputable, the fence needed mending, the yard lacked cleaning up, the house wanted a coat of paint, some of the windows exhibited a cleaning up, the house wanted a coat of paint, some of the windows exhibited a broken pane, while odd and irritating bunches of brambles and clumps of locust shoots cried for the scythe and bush hook. This was the condition when Lincoln left. But during his absence Mrs. Lincoln had instituted a campaign of her own. As we drove up to the place we found the fence repaired, the yard mown and clean, every pane of glass was in, and the house glistened and shone in a coat of white paint. Mrs. Lincoln herself stood in the front door to enjoy the effect of all this order and restoration on her husband. But on this occasion he held the middle of the road and looked coldly on the house and his wife as one who did not recognize either. He made as if he wanted to go by. Just opposite the gatte, however, he pulled up his horse, and with a face grave enough, bar a twinkle of the eye, bowed with great politeness to Mrs. Lincoln and said, 'I beg your pardon, madam, but can you tell me who lives here?'

"Send your horses to the barn and who lives here?'

who fives here?

"Send your horses to the barn, and you and Mr. Richardson come in. I'll show you who lives here,' responded Mrs. Lincoln, with just a trace of nettle in her tone. And Honest Old Abe went in."— Washington Star.
